I wish I could give this book 5 stars. I love the idea of the book, I visually enjoyed looking through the book but trying some of the exercises just did not meet my expectations. Chapter one goes over designing and finding inspiration. I utilize these tools regularly before I got the book but it's nice to be able to define what I was doing :) . Throughout the book she gives you activities to do and in this chapter, they are doable and relate very well to one another. She covers recognizing inspiration, designing your own storyboard, identify design elements, evaluating the design and sketch designs. She also goes over color theory. Chapter two was about fashion sketching the exercises included Practicing the basic shapes, drawing flat garments, drawing more clothing shapes, creating a croquis, rendering a croquis, and rendering fabrics. I also think this section was good-I am not a fan of the actual drawing of designs but everyone has their own aesthetic :). Chapter 3 : Pattern-making by flat pattern-and this is the chapter where Joi begins to lose me. Rotating darts, combining darts, slashing darts, dart equivalents, seams, slash and spread, bodice back, skirts, skirt slash and spread, gores-godgets and circle skirts, sleeves, kimono and raglan sleeves, necklines and facings, collars, Jackets and coats, With that written all of that is covered in about 48 pages-which is a clear indication that either Joi knows some super short cuts to teaching people flat pattern making or the section was not in-depth enough. I go with the latter-She has design challenges for each section- the problem is, they will not be doable from this book alone.
