I preordered my copy of Lose Weight by Eating a day early (Thank you, !) and stayed up late planning for my week of meals. So far I've made the jalapeno poppers (I made those after she included them in a recipe column for VINO magazine, which I was the editor of at the time), blue cheese buffalo burgers, oatmeal and tomatoe basil mozzarella panini, as well as several of the smoothie recipes from the website. My household has a number of food restrictions or limitations--my daughter cannot have gluten or dairy, no gluten for me and my dad is adversed to eating gluten- or dairy-free and has trouble with food that's different from what's he ate for the last 40 years in the MidWest. The buffalo burgers went over well, I subbed regular buns for gluten-free and left out the cheese for my daughter. None of us had ever had buffalo meat and we all very much enjoyed them and will have them again. I have read through nearly every recipe and find that they are all easy to make gluten-free and fairly easy to make dairy-free (my daughter doesn't miss cheese from recipes as much as I do, so some recipes I'm not sure I could make dairy-free and not lose the intended taste, but that's mostly just the mac and cheese), but that's OK. I'm excited to have a cookbook full of recipes that either fit our diet or are easily modified and Audrey includes tips for modifying recipes for different restrictions/diets (such as vegetarian and gluten-free) and people's personal tastes. I enjoy how relatable Audrey is--she's been there and understands. As someone who knows how to eat healthy, and often does, but gets busy or tired, which leads to the weight going back on, I'm excited to have a book full of recipes that are meant to be delicious AND take the weight off.
